Haalan Campaign (2026)
A Player's Primer (1.0)

"A nation born from a thousand years of war."

This primer document contains the common knowledge a character living in Haalan might reasonably know. It is not complete history. Much of the world and much of its truth remains to be discovered by brave souls.

Campaign Opening: Story begins in Luvel on Sulday, the 7th of Vigus 275 A.W., just six days after First Morning, at the beginning of a new year.

Welcome to Haalan

Haalan is a nation built upon friendship, science, and war. For over a thousand years, six independent nations fought one another through shifting alliances, invasions, betrayals, occupations, and uneasy ceasefires. Eventually, exhaustion accomplished what conquest could not. Representatives of the six powers gathered in Borgan, laid down their weapons, and formed a single nation under new banner.

Borgan has suffered less than the other nations during the long wars and emerged as the strongest city. It became the seat of new found government and the home of the Crown. The old kingdoms did not disappear, however. Their cities, customs, heraldry, rivalries, and regional identities remain important even after the generations of unity.

Modern Haalan is prosperous, increasingly industrial, fiercely independent, and largely peaceful. Its people tend to place greater faith in ingenuity, community, and mortal achievements than in the ancient Gods. But the peace has become uncertain…

The World Right Now

The King is Dead. The old King (Rikdag Boleslaus II, simply King Boleslaus the Second) has recently died, and his young successor has taken the throne. Rumors about the new King (Lambert Boleslaus, simply King Lambert) are starting to spread tainting the royal image.

The Red Lung is Spreading. A contagious respiratory illness has reached communities across Haalan. Most survive, but severe cases can leave victims weak, breathless, coughing blood, or dead. Healing magic exists, but there are nowhere near enough healers for an entire population in need.

The Peace is Uneasy. Mivolan and Izedel watch Borgan closely. Regalla increasingly questions whether it should remain part of Haalan. Luvel tries to remain neutral meanwhile Drabasha supports Borgan's regime. There are some people that believe a civil war is inevitable while others hope Haalani will remember what war does to a nation and find a better solution to on-going problem.

The Roads are Still Open, Mostly. Trade continues and people still travel but quarantines, disrupted commerce, frightened settlements, bandits, and monsters have made long journeys less certain.

The Six Regions of Haalan

Borgan – The political heart of Haalan and the seat of the Crown. Borgan is the nation's largest city and remains the strongest center of government, wealth, and institutional power.

Luvel – A vast coastal-desert region famous for commerce and its control of Balchur Pass, the great water route through the central mountains. Luvel is industrious, practical, and politically neutral.

Izedel – A cosmopolitan eastern coastal power with strong maritime traditions and a large immigrant population. Izedel is one of the regions rumored to be reconsidering Borgan's dominance.

Mivolan – A northern power with a strong regional identity. Its leaders are widely believed to have ambitions beyond their current position within the union.

Regalla – A west maritime region on the Haalan Bay. Increasing number of Regallans openly question whether Regalla should remain part of Haalan at all.

Drabasha – A traditional supporter of Borgan and most firmly aligned with the Crown.

Gods, Faith, & the Forsaken

Faith was once deeply rooted into Haalan's soil. According to the oldest traditions, The Gods lived physically in the Mortal World. They drank best wine, ate the best lamb, and made love to one another from sunrise to sunset but a Divine conflict eventually plagued the land with jealousy that lead to war. The Gods created mortals in their image to fight these wars for them for generations and generations. Mortals ultimately rejected the Gods' commands, made pace with former enemies, and began building civilizations of their own based on new ideas. Those seeking to worship Gods found new paths to follow. Those that chose worship were then cast into the underground discovering a whole new world under the surface called Umberdeep. Many ancestries have adapted to life in the underworld and still live down there in upper layers of Umberdeep.

Ancient religion remains visible everywhere across Haalan. You can see the remains of worship in holidays, architecture, regional symbols, prayers, burial ceremonies, and even family traditions. But an organized worship holds far less power than it once did. Cleric still exist. Their power does not require a direct service to a deity. A profound faith in an ideal, philosophy, community, tradition, or moral conviction can be enough to power their Divine magic.

The Original Six

Varkos was the God of Death and War, traditionally associated with Borgan region.
Solara was the Sun Goddess, associated with Luve, Light, and the preservation of Life.
Selvara was the Moon Goddess, associated with Izedel, sea, navigation, tides, sailors, and fishermen.
Ravel was the Trickster God, associated with Mivolan, riddles, puzzles, festivals, and masks.
Odrun was the God of Knowledge, associated with Drabasha, books, scrolls, and research.
Thaelwyn was the God of Nature, associated with wild, untamed ocean and Regalla islands.

The Three Forsaken

Azrathul, The King Beneath, a Forsaken God that is associated with idea that freedom is the source of mortal suffering. One ruler, one law, one purpose: everything beneath it should obey.

Velshara, The Mother of Worms, a Forsaken Goddess that is associated with decay. Velshara teaches that decay is life's purest form. Rot feeds growth, corpses feed the soil, and the disease is part of natural life cycle. Her forbidden worship has grown increasingly relevant during the Red Lung crisis.

Nhal, The Empty God, associated with forbidden knowledge, prophecy, dreams, cosmic truths, and things mortals may not be capable of understanding. Some scholars doubt Nhal ever existed at all.

The Forsaken Three is not a single organization or belief. Their individual cults, philosophies, and surviving traditions may have little in common and much of their history is disputed. Practice in Haalan is strictly forbidden and will be punished by the Crown.

The People of Haalan, the Haalani

Humans, dwarves, elves, halflings, and gnomes make up most of Haalan's population. Orcs, goblins, and numerous beastfolk are also established parts of Haalani society. Regional culture usually matters more than ancestry around Haalan.

Dragonborn & Kobolds

Dragonborn are rare but welcome in the modern society. One widespread legend claims that whenever a true dragon makes a wish, a Dragonborn comes to life. Dragonborn themselves do not remember the dragon, the wish, or the circumstances of their creation. Kobolds are similarly rare and often associated with the Dragonborn. Kobolds traditionally regard Dragonborn with a peculiar mixture of reverence, loyalty, imitation, and familial affection.

Tieflings and Aasimar

Either can be born to parents of any ancestry. Both used to be rare and interpreted as omens Aasimar as favorable signs, Tieflings as troubling ones. These superstitions persist even in secular Haalan and say nothing about an individual's morality.

The Umberdeep Folks

Drow, Duergar, and Svirfneblin are generally called Umberdeep Elves, Dwarves, and Gnomes. Umberdeep describes ancestry or cultural origin not the morality. Many folks born in the Umberdeep can be often described as Umberdeep-born.

Folks from Beyond Haalan

Goliaths originate in Hrothmar, the frozen northern homeland of giants. Tabaxi originate in Marakai, a vast tropical archipelago far to the east. Aarakocra and other bird-folk originate in Caelora, a dry and mountainous land to the southeast. They are uncommon in Haalan but not unknown.

Other Origins

Some folks trace their origin to places beyond the ordinary surface dwelling. Fairies, Satyrs, Harengons, and many others may come from the Everweald for example.

The Six Realms

The First Breath is the realm of primordial elemental forces.
The Everweald is the realm of fey, ancient magic, strange beauty, and untamed nature.
The Mortal World is the physical home of Haalan.
The Final Shore is the realm of the dead.
The Umberdeep is a vast subterranean physical world beneath the surface of Haalan.
The Infernal Reach is a hellish realm associated with fiends and demons.

There is no known divine realm. The Gods, if the oldest tales are true, once lived in the Mortal World*. Where did they go? What happened to them? Is the absence of Gods better or worse for the folks of Haalan? There are questions worth fighting for. What are you fighting for?*

Day, Month, Year

A Haalani year contains 364 days, divided into 13 months of 28 days each. Every month therefore consists of exactly four seven-day weeks, giving the year exactly 52 weeks. The dates always fall on the same weekday making a Haalani calendar easier to understand. Seasons go in cycle of Winter, Spring, Summer, Fall, Winter, Spring… with each season lasting little over three months. Some seasons tend to drag, especially an extra hot Summer or an unusually cold Winter.

Days
Varday always falls on a 1st, 8th, 15th, and 22nd.
Thaelday always falls on 2nd, 9th, 16th, and 23rd.
Wisday always falls on 3rd, 10th, 17th, and 24th.
Selday always falls on 4th, 11th, 18th, and 25th.
Ravday always falls on 5th, 12th, 19th, and 26th.
Tollday always falls on 6th, 13th, 20th, and 27th.
Sulday always falls on 7th, 14th, 21st, and 28th.

Months

1st Vigus	2nd Radus	3rd Demus	4th Bitus
5th Progus	6th Lorus	7th Tempus	8th Turmus
9th Cerpus	10th Accus	11th Addus	12th Vulpus
13th Galus

How dates are spoke: “Sulday, the 7th of Vigus” or simply “Vigus 7”

Holidays (not complete list)
Vigus 1 – First Morning, Haalan’s New Year Celebration, associated with fresh start.
Demus 28 – Haali, Celebration of Pride, associated with rights, visibility, and acceptance of everyone.
Bitus 12 – Founder’s Feast, Haalan wide celebration emphasizing that no one should eat alone.

Progus 18 – Luveli celebration rooted in worship of Solara.
Addus 1 – Day of the Dead, celebration of those that has passed to the Final Shore.

Year
Campaign starts on Sulday, the 7th of Vigus 275 A.W
A.W. is era "After War" is the modern era of Haalan. B.W. or Before the War is often ancient history that has been written, rewritten, destroyed all over again. T.Y.W era is during the "Thousand Year War" and the details of that history can be muddy as well due to "history being written by victor".

Time & Travel
Haalan is massive continent, comparable size to that of real-world Australia. Travel across Haalan will take time and someone brave enough to do it.

Rough Estimate (subject to change at any time)
From Luvel to Borgan, it would take about 32 days of travel. So these extensive journeys will need to be carefully calculated.

A Few Things Worth to note about Haalan:

Haalan remembers War. The union exists because six nations eventually decided that continued victory was less valuable than peace. Old identifies still matter. A person can consider themselves Haalani while remaining fiercely Luveli, Izedeli, Mivolani, Regallan, Drabashan, Borgani, or Umberdeep-Born.

Magic is real, but singular. It may come through scholarship, faith, nature, discipline, bargains, bloodlines, or strange sources.

The world is dangerous, not doomed. Markets remain open. Ships still sail. People fall in love, argue, work, celebrate holidays, tell stories, and make plans for next year.

You are not expected to know everything. Your character will know things based on your upbringing. Please ask questions. Please invite yourself to crate and share ideas to enrich the world around you. I firmly believe that most players play a game of D&D in a good faith.

There is much yet to be discovered in the vast land of Haalan.

Welcome, adventurer. Your grand journey is about to begin…